

What are some things you learned from our big Immigrant Diary Project about the history and experience of immigrants - old (1900's) and modern (2025)? What were their push and pull factors - (problems that made them want to leave their country and hopes that made them want to come to America)? Describe city life - housing and jobs. What were some Progressive reforms? What did you find most interesting or meaningful about this project? Explain in one large paragraph. (DO NOT research this. What you remember is good enough for me).

During this MASSIVE project I learned all about immigrants and why they wanted to come to America. One big reason why immigrants wanted to come to the United States from 1880 through 1920 was because there was a bunch of job opportunities here in the United States. Another reason why Immigrants wanted to come to the United States was because they wanted to buy land that was much cheaper than from where they came from, there was also more land here. Whenever immigrants got here they had jobs that had very rough working conditions, they would often get hurt, they didn't get that much money, and they would also have to work long hours. Also, for the children who worked, they would often get beat if they didn't do their jobs properly. The thing that I found most interesting from the progressive era was all of the laws that were passed by theodore roosevelt that saved the society. Theodore roosevelt passed laws like the meat inspection act. All food had to be processed in some sort of way. Also, he passed laws like the pure food and drug act.
